United We Knit

"My dear knitters, crocheters, crafters, and friends:

"How quickly and unexpectedly things are changing. Who could have guessed that on the eve of the spring equinox, the earliest in 124 years, that we would be in the midst of a global crisis, one in which no one person is unaffected."

This was the beginning of a letter that I wrote and posted on social media on March 23, 2020, almost one month ago. As I sit here in my apartment, with the sun shining, there is zero noise coming from outside, truly unusual for a Friday morning in New York City. Our governor has just extended his "New York State on PAUSE" order until May 15, with no end in sight. A trip to the grocery store is now a surreal experience. While joining the long lines just to get in the door, I take the time to notice all the different types of people around me (hopefully at least six feet away). Some are angry, grumpy, or unaware; others are trying to make the best of it with singing, wearing fun, colorful, handmade face masks. There was even a very upbeat young person the other day entertaining the group by playing the banjo. This is our new normal.

So what have we all been doing throughout this isolation period? I, for one, have been knitting and crocheting a lot more. Our yarn editor, Matthew Schrank, has been sewing face masks for friends and family. Here at the magazine we are continuing with our daily routine, just now at home, with meetings online instead of in the conference room, texts and phone calls instead of a visit to each other's desks. There have been some challenges along the way in adjusting to this new scenario, but working as a group we are managing to get this issue to the printer. "It takes a village!"

We begin our fashion stories with "Essential Elements" (page 39), six classic styles to knit up for your capsule wardrobe in neutral shades and lovely basic yarns. These pieces can all be worn year-round and will never go out of style.

Blue has always been my favorite color, and lucky me, Classic Blue is the color of the year. We celebrate it in "Out of the Blue" (page 44), with four designs in various shades of this endlessly enchanting primary color, using beautiful, summery yarns.

Shawls are still a staple in the knitting world. We chose three gorgeous and colorful hand-dyed yarns for a trio of reversible wraps. See the different ways to wear them in "Wrap & Turn" (page 54).

With Spring/Summer 2020 under our belt, we will shift our focus to Early Fall. This issue will likely look a bit different than it normally does. The garments are already being knit up, but with New York City on virtual lockdown, we may not be able to photograph them on live models. Perhaps we'll shoot on dress forms, or hangers, or flat, or a combination. We are in the process of working that out. (We still hold out hope that we will be back to "business as usual" in time to work our typical magic.) Either way, it will be a very special issue.

A big, heartfelt thanks to all our readers who have supported our magazine throughout the years, and to the staff at SoHo Publishing and all the designers, knitters, advertisers, and outside production people, who have worked diligently and over many hours, while also dealing with personal issues as a result of this crisis. Because of your dedication and love of the craft, we can continue to produce content and keep inspiring people to knit and crochet for years to come.

Stay healthy and safe.

STYLE TAKEAWAY The Beauty of Blue

WAY BACK IN 2000, PANTONE named its first official Color of the Year. It crowned Cerulean Blue the color of the millennium, a color to calm and cool at a time when Y2K anxiety was high. Fast-forward twenty years and the world is facing a different sort of anxiety; Pantone made a prescient move by selecting the familiar, grounding hue of Classic Blue for 2020. As Pantone has become a household name over the past two decades, its Color of the Year announcement has grown more and more influential in fashion, art, and advertising. And the color blue has remained a mainstay throughout, as evidenced by Yoko Hatta's blue beauty from our Fall 2010 issue (above left). We're hopping on the trend with four gorgeous knits, including Brooke Nico's pullover (above right), to keep you in style for the reign of Classic Blue.

SAVING SHEEP, ONE SHEARING AT A TIME

1. Navajo-Churro sheep, a 400-year-old breed, on a reservation.
2. A Shave 'Em to Save 'Em project in progress.
3. A Shetland ram soaking up the sunshine.

SHAVE 'EM TO SAVE 'EM, a challenge campaign started by the Livestock Conservancy, aims to promote the wool of rare sheep breeds by engaging both producers and consumers. It is the brainchild of Marie Minnich, a conservancy board member who is also a fiber artist and a shepherd with a flock of Romeldale/CVM sheep. Here's how it works: Fiber artists can buy wool from rare-breed providers (there's a handy online directory), earning stamps in their "fiber passports." Artists can earn items—discounts on wool, fiber wash, patterns, felting supplies—with each completed project and are encouraged to share pictures and info on Facebook and Ravelry. The more breeds an artist uses, the more stamps they get, the more items they can earn, and the more people are being inspired to buy fiber from rare-breed providers.

Deborah Niemann-Boehle, a conservancy program research associate, explains the program's impetus: "Wool sold to the wool pool in the Northeast in 2016 brought between 60 and 85 cents per pound. During the same period, raw wool sold directly to consumers through specialty markets, such as Etsy, sold for remarkably higher prices, from $8 to $40 per pound. Interest in fiber arts is high, and this represents a valuable market opportunity for heritage-breed wool. For this campaign, educational blogs, videos, and tip sheets will help breeders build capacity in order to develop and meet a demand for heritage fibers. Milestones, prizes, and an online community will encourage fiber artists to use fiber from sheep breeds on the Conservation Priority List."

The Livestock Conservancy (www.livestockconservancy.org) conducts research, education, outreach, marketing, and genetic rescues to help ensure the future of rare-breed agriculture. It publishes America's list of endangered farm animal breeds and works to ensure those breeds aren't lost forever. The main goal of Shave 'Em to Save 'Em is to keep wonderful sheep breeds from extinction. Breeds are ranked from critical to recovering. Breeders are expected to benefit from the project as they improve their wool quality and marketing practices, leading to greater farm revenues. Fiber artists will benefit from access to more information about the diverse wool types, and from connections to local sources that will expand the palette of fibers from which to work. Endangered sheep breeds will benefit from greater consumer awareness and increased use of their products. Everyone wins.

As Niemann-Boehle says, "The ultimate goal of the Livestock Conservancy is to put ourselves out of a job. We'd love to see all twenty-two breeds of sheep graduated from the list, but that won't happen unless the sheep have a job. Many shepherds have been raising them at a financial loss for years simply because they love a specific breed and don't want to see them become extinct. But if we can put these sheep to work and help the shepherds sell their wool, then the shepherds will be able to increase the size of their flocks and ultimately secure the future of the breeds." —MOLLY POHLIG

A BOOST FOR FIBER-ENTHUSIAST SCHOLARS

Beans for Brains, the brainchild of popular online yarn store Jimmy Beans Wool, has announced another year of its merit-based scholarship program for artistic students pursuing or in the process of attending post-secondary education. Focused on characteristics including yarn knowledge, academic performance, community service, financial need, and more, the program aims to uplift creativity through the fiber arts. In the past, the Beans for Brains Scholarship was given to four or five students per year to help them accomplish their dreams at local universities like the University of Nevada, Reno, and at prestigious schools such as Harvard and Yale. For 2020, Beans for Brains is upping its game, awarding six scholarships of $2,500 each, divided between four national regions, a local award in Reno, where Jimmy Beans Wool is headquartered, and a community service award.

This magazine is proud to be a sponsor, helping burgeoning knitters, crocheters, and weavers to realize their fiber dreams. Find more information at www.jimmybeanswool.com/details/knitting/scholarshipHome.asp. —MOLLY POHLIG

Family Plies

Two mother-daughter teams in Alberta are creating a blend of local wool, local designers, and local fibery spirit. BY LEE ANN DALTON

ROSEBUD RIVER FIBRE MILL 1. The spinning machine. 2. A marled blue-and-green Corriedale DK also fades between colors. 3. Blue Tweed Corriedale DK. HIPPIY STRINGS 4. Hippy Strings offers a deep selection of hand-dyed yarn. 5. The knitting circle room welcomes makers to sit, create, and exchange ideas and inspiration.

JUST OUTSIDE THE TINY HAMLET OF ROSEBUD, ALBERTA (about 70 miles, or 113 km, northeast of Calgary), the Rosebud River runs through the 340-acre Martin homestead, in operation since 1897. Alexandra and Jim Martin have kept the farm self-sustaining, with cattle, chickens, turkeys, and geese, their own hayfields, and a large garden that provides most of the family's food. There had been sheep on the farm in earlier decades, but seven years ago, Alex decided to add a small flock to the current mix, in order to have a supply of wool for spinning, knitting, and crocheting. In 2019, with Alex's love of local wool and daughter Stevie Vermunt's talent for dying wool and yarn, the idea for Rosebud River Fibre Mill (www.rosebudriverfibre.com) and on Facebook and Instagram) was born.

Alex says, "We love the fact that wool is a renewable, biodegradable resource, so we wanted to make Canadian yarn and wool and alpaca products more readily available as an alternative to man-made materials. Our machinery arrived in March of 2019, and it's a full-time job for both of us. We do all processing, splitting the work evenly, and Stevie does the dyeing."

The mill's website includes descriptions of the methods used to process raw fiber into batts, rovings, yarns, and rug yarns, as well as information about the Canadian farmers that provide the fiber. "We strive to foster connections between makers and producers by discussing the source of the fiber, the breeds of sheep, and the ecological benefits of natural fibers," Alex says. The mill also offers custom processing for fiber farmers.

Alex and Stevie attend fiber festivals in order to connect with fellow producers and fiber artists. "We hope to expand our wholesale offerings to stores and indie dyers," Alex says. For the future, she adds, "We'd eventually like to open a shop in our community and work on transitioning to running the mill on renewable power. Innovation is important to us, so we are always looking for ways to improve our process. There is always more to learn in the fiber arts. It's important to make time for creating by hand."

If you have news of upcoming knitting-themed events or know someone you'd like to see featured in this column, send me a comment at dalton.leeann@gmail.com.

HIPPIY STRINGS

On the other side of Alberta, in Sexsmith, about 13 miles (21 km) north of Grande Prairie, there's a place where you can kick back with twenty or so other knitters in a comfy "knitting circle room" and take all the time you want to create by hand. Another mother-and-daughter (in-law) team, Sherrill Young and Robyn Young, opened Hippy Strings in September 2016, in a unique setting: the historic train station in Sexsmith.

"The train station is located directly in front of the last remaining grain elevator in Sexsmith and is over 100 years old," Sherrill says. "There are lots of little nooks and crannies with so many things to look at. Often we hear our customers say 'we need to look again—every time we look there is something new to see!' We love all things handmade and support our local makers by offering their items for sale." Along with yarn, Hippy Strings carries local handmade products like jewelry, soaps and bath products, honey, cross-stitch kits, and a variety of hand-knit items such as mitts, toques, and scarves. Hippy Strings offers its products for sale both in the store and online (www.hippystings.ca).

"As we got to know our customers better, we learned that hand-dyed was our best seller," Sherrill says. "We now have a large selection of hand-dyed yarns and are working on stocking yarns with unique fiber contents." Hippy Strings is a Ravelry Pro store, so they can sell patterns directly from Ravelry designers, but for display knits, they often use patterns by local designers Cozy Up Knits, a group of four sisters from Alberta who create designs for just about anything a knitter could hope for. Hippy Strings hosts fall and winter knitting classes, as well as a wide variety of special events, including Valentine's High Tea and Knitting, Christmas Potluck, and a Knit All the Things Retreat in Jasper, Alberta. Robyn and Sherrill have turned Hippy Strings into far more than a whistle-stop for knitters, and the coffee's always on. ■

Notions from Knitting Ephemera

This beloved book of wondrous knitting trivia is a source of the craftiest delights.

If you are wondering whether or not you've got enough yarn left to finish a row when coming to the end of a skein, measure the remaining yarn. If it's four or more times the width of the row you're knitting, you should have enough.

What type of garment has most frequently made the cover of Vogue Knitting?
THE PULLOVER SWEATER.
The color most often used for the cover garment? Believe it or not, WHITE.

Author Hans Christian Andersen wrote a fairy tale called "The Darning Needle" about a, well, darning needle who fancied herself a bit above her station and came to a bad end.

It is said that U.S. President James Buchanan liked to crochet in his spare time.

Knickerbockers are a form of KNEE-LENGTH PANTS, often worn by boys in the winter in the early 20th century, along with knee-high stockings (sometimes called knickerbocker hose or knickerbocker stockings). These long socks often featured turn-down cuffs and shaping to allow the sock to fit over the calf. The term knickerbocker was also used to refer to Americans of Dutch ancestry who settled in New York, after the pen name Diedrich Knickerbocker, used by Washington Irving.

A center-pull ball was once called a false clue. (Clew is an old Anglo-Saxon word for a ball of yarn—perhaps the two terms are related.)

SHETLAND RING OR WEDDING RING SHAWLS are knit in beautiful lace patterns and in such fine wool that, as Shetland expert Sarah Don wrote, "although they can measure up to 6 feet square, they can with ease be pulled through a woman's wedding ring."

10 Questions: Norah Gaughan

Does she even need an introduction? If you know knitting, you know Norah Gaughan as the designer of some of the most eye-catching, recognizable patterns around. BY MOLLY POHLIG

1. How and when did you learn to knit?

My friend Grace Judson in Princeton, New Jersey, taught me how during a particularly hot week in the summer of 1975. We retreated indoors to the air-conditioning, and to keep us both busy, Grace had me knit a two-color hat, in the round, in fingering-weight wool. I was 14 and she was 16.

2. You're basically the queen of cables. What's your all-time favorite cable to knit?

How could I have a favorite? Let's say No. 74, Medallion, from my Knitted Cable Sourcebook. I am still amazed that a few simple cable crosses can make the fancy rounded shape.

3. What's your No. 1 source of inspiration?

Pinterest. Not only can I keep track of fashion ideas there, I also see knitwear from all over the world and from any era and keep track of it all in folders. It's the place to look for nature/biology inspiration too.

4. How do you balance an extensive teaching schedule with design work?

That's a question I've been trying to answer for the past six years, ever since I left Berroco and began freelancing again and teaching more than ever. When I am scheduling teaching events, I have to remember to leave a few days for preparation and almost a week for recovery after a retreat. I am not capable of flying home and designing the next day. Taking the summer off from teaching and trying to limit most months to one event is kind of working.

5. How much does the fiber you're working with influence the design?

A lot, of course. That's why swatching is so important. Swatching is my life.

7. Your work walks this incredible line with minimal silhouettes and maximal details. Would you consider yourself either a minimalist or a maximalist?

I've always been in internal conflict about that, like there are two of me in here. I love surface pattern. I am not likely to put a maximal pattern on a maximal shape, that's too hard—too difficult for me, and too difficult for other knitters.

8. How did growing up with two creative parents influence your life?

It was everything. I am sure being artistic is both nurture and nature. Some may be in the genes, but my brother and I were immersed in creativity all the time. We made things, we looked at art, and to be honest, we felt special because our parents were artists. Then, Mom, along with her mom, taught me how to embroider, crochet, hand sew, and sew on the machine. They taught me to love fabric and yarn. On a basic level, if my parents weren't both freelancers, would I know that freelancing existed? Also, my first designs were published because Mom [Phoebe Adams Gaughan] brought one in to show the editor she was illustrating for.

9. What's your favorite spot in the world to knit?

What first comes to mind is a bar in a lovely hotel located next to both a lagoon and an ancient lava field in western Iceland. Thinking more practically, the place I do knit most is in my Ikea leather chair in front of our projection screen at home. We don't have a TV, but that doesn't mean I don't watch TV.

10. What's the best knitting advice you've ever received?

Making Marls:
A Sourcebook for Multistrand Handknitting

By Cecelia Campochiaro
(Chroma Opaci Books; $65)

Oh, to have the intellectual wattage and design sensibility of Cecelia Campochiaro. Like her first book, Sequence Knitting, in which Campochiaro systematically demonstrates how shifting simple knit-purl pattern repeats yields different fabrics, Making Marls shows how knitting two, three, or four yarns together can create beautiful textiles. Given that this springs from Campochiaro's brain, expect an epic explication of marled yarns (that is, plies of different colors/textures that are spun together, or differing strands held together) along with examples of marled fabrics, patterns, and sequences. There's an interesting history of marled knitting, color theory applied to marls, and an introduction to microswatching—a 6-stitch by 4-row sample—that allows you to marl up a bunch of colors to play with, plus intel on how to figure marled yardage. Goodness, there is so much more, including the projects, which are as tasteful as they are smart. Of particular note, the kaleidoscopic thirteen- and fifteen-color Castel scarves are works of stash-busting art. Yes, the price of entry to this marled world is steep, but it's nothing compared with Campochiaro's gift to the knitting canon and how we think about yarn.

100 Knits: Interweave's Ultimate Pattern Collection

By the Editors at Interweave
(Interweave; $45)

Though this won't replace the sheaves of Interweave magazines you've collected over the last twenty-plus years, it does go a long way toward helping those with less robust libraries make up the difference. Divvied up into chapters featuring hats and socks, wraps, cardigans, pullovers, and tanks and tees, 100 Knits contains plenty of gems like Grace Akhrem's Nautilus hat with its charming slouch, General Hogbuffer's labyrinthine Slippery Slope socks, and Laura Reinbach's straightforward Blake shawl. But the real show-stoppers here are the sweaters, and editors don't skimp with forty-seven choices. (Turn to page 352 and check out the cable-liciousness that is Cheryl Chow's Charlestown pullover). This best-of-Interweave compendium, all 512 pages, also features many of the publisher's most-loved knits including its Ravelry top five—the super famous Dahlia cardigan, the Lucy hat, the Central Park hoodie, the Koolhaus hat, and the Swallowtail shawl. Tuck this next to your other greatest-hits volumes, and on a lazy summer afternoon, pull them down and start planning your winter knits.

Embroidered Botanicals:
Beautiful Motifs That Explore Stitching with Wool, Cotton, and Metallic Threads

By Yumiko Higuchi
(Roost Books; $21.95)

You know that cardigan you banged out last year? The one that bores you now? What if you revised your minimalist cardi as part of la vie bohème? Flick through these pages to reveal inspiration for something truly special. Maybe you'll scatter roses along a shoulder. Twine paisleys up one sleeve. Or add a whimsical border of perfectly groomed poodles. Whatever you pluck from these pages, rest assured it will be exquisitely designed. Yumiko Higuchi, author of Zakka Embroidery and A Year of Embroidery, is a talented embroidery artist with an avid Instagram audience (274,000 strong), who in her most recent title uses floral and faunal motifs to reveal how she "paints" with thread. Wool tapestry thread produces stitches in bas-relief, crewel allows for fine details, cotton floss lends luster, and so on. She also includes lovely how-tos, traceable motifs, and a smattering of charming projects ranging from feminine brooches to cushions and slippers. With Higuchi's guidance, we can upcycle our tired sweater with a riotous garden or add a sweet thicket of ferns as a reminder that beauty is as close as an open window.

Crochet with London Kaye:
Projects and Ideas to Yarn Bomb
Your Life

By London Kaye
(Abrams Books; $24.99)

Was it her stint working at an Apple Store in Manhattan that caused her to "think different"? Her training as a dancer? Or a chance meeting with the yarn bomber and fiber artist Olek that caused this former ballerina to create a daily crochet practice and become an international public art sensation? In Crochet with London Kaye, this exuberant fiber artist defines yarn bombing—the what, hows, and whys of it (because it sparks joy!)—while also offering a dozen or so projects (think surfboard cozy, chair cover, and tire wrap, along with "soft graffiti" motifs including stick people, roses, and a pattern for making your own crocheted sign) we can use to bomb our homes and neighborhoods.

But the star of this show is Kaye's yarn bombing portfolio, a tour of her remarkable artwork lassoed for herself and an A-list of clients: the "Fair Isle" Miller Lite billboard in Times Square, a window for Valentino, a crocheted brain for the Telus Health Brain Project, a school bus wrap for a Gap commercial, a troll she stitched up in response to Internet haters. Through it all is Kaye's optimistic voice that encourages us to stop, notice, make stuff, and not take our art, whatever it may be, too seriously.

20 Shawls, Hats, Ponchos, and More in Bulky Yarn

By Barbara Benson
(Stackpole Books; $24.95)

Big Yarn, Beautiful Lace Knits will give you all the inspo you need to change up your shawl and accessories game. The premise is that if you zoom in on daintier lace patterns, you'll get an entirely different effect. That's what Barbara Benson, host of the popular YouTube channel "WatchBarbara Knit," found when she began knitting lace with larger needles and zaftig yarns. In addition to dramatic time savings afforded by upscaling your materials, you'll discover new surface-design potential in the exaggerated stitches presented here. For example, Benson's Cinches and Ladders cowl uses big moves (double yarn overs and cinch-4 stitches) to create a graphic neck warmer knitted at 2.25 stitches to the inch. Un, Deux, Trois is a two-skein wonder that retains its lacy feel in spite of the supersized gauge. And the bold lace of Bitis will chase the chill of untamed air-conditioning all summer long. Use this as a primer to explore lace knitting on a larger, quicker scale or to lace up something fast. ■

Red Alert

A new book highlights endangered animals through knitwear design—and inspires us to take action.

TWO YEARS AGO ON A DREARY NOVEMBER DAY, Dorte Rørmann took Polly Cevallos, her longtime friend from Australia, to her favorite yarn shop, Cashmere Company in Kolding, Denmark. Surrounded by owner Lisa Renner's highly curated collection of yarns from brands such as Madelinetosh, BC Garn, Isager, Rowan, and Kettle Yarn, the three sat at the table drinking tea and admiring Renner's most recent book of knitting designs, Queens Blend.

The conversation turned to what the Danish designer would do next. Renner, who publishes books under the imprint Cashmere, mused that she wanted to extend her reach beyond Denmark, possibly with a book of animal-inspired children's patterns in English that would support animal welfare.

Excitedly, Rørmann pointed to Cevallos. "You need to talk to Polly. Here is the animal welfare organization!"

Cevallos, a zoologist and founding director of the Jane Goodall Institute Australia, pounced. "Why don't we make it about endangered animals," she suggested, "and make it something that can help them?"

Suddenly, this impromptu gathering of knitters became the inaugural editorial meeting for one of the most compelling knitting books to debut in recent years. Difficult to classify because of its depth and scope, R:E:D: Rescue Endangered by Design is a coffee-table-style book filled with more than thirty-three knitting patterns, each representing one of seventeen endangered creatures from around the world.

A VITAL VOLUME

"The decisions made this one afternoon formed the skeleton of this book," Renner says. "We would include two animals from each continent. There would be the connection between children and animals that gets this very sad agenda told in a way that we can bear to hear it and that would touch people's hearts."

But to distill the identity of this almost four-and-a-half-pound volume to "knitting book" belies the exquisite content contained in its acid-free pages that transcends the patterns themselves (though, they're remarkable, too). Each animal, with the exception of staghorn coral, is represented not only by two thoughtfully designed patterns—one for children, the other for teens and adults—but also by gorgeous wildlife photography, watercolor illustrations, information on current threats and conservation, and suggestions on how readers can help.

Though climate change has commanded global headlines of late, R:E:D: draws attention to the planet's plunging biodiversity, which is also at a tipping point. In her foreword to the book, the renowned primatologist Jane Goodall writes that as many as 1 million plant and animal species are in danger of extinction and many will vanish in coming years.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) Red List of Threatened Species—considered to be the world's most thorough status report of global species—puts the number of species threatened with extinction at 30,000 out of a total of 112,400 species they have assessed. (Estimates are that a total of 8.7 million species live on Earth.)

"Species are disappearing up to 1,000 times faster than before humans got involved," writes Grethel Aguilar Rojas, IUCN acting director general, in R:E:D; "and many ecosystems are on the brink of collapse."

ANIMAL AMBASSADORS

To choose animals for the book, Cevallos spent countless hours poring over the IUCN Red List and applied various criteria, starting with the rule: no iconic animals, those charismatic creatures most people recognize as endangered or culturally important in some way. So no giant pandas, lions, tigers, or bears (the polar bear was an important exception because of how it is affected by warming temperatures and pollution). She also wanted to include animals representative of different classifications in the animal world (so the book wouldn't be mammal-centric), along with wildlife from different continents and animals that face differing threats from climbing temperatures and pollution to shrinking habitat, poaching, and disease. Plus, each animal had to be identified by the Red List as critically endangered or endangered (though, here again, the "vulnerable" polar bear made the cut).

Once the animals were selected, Cevallos introduced designers to their stories, among them the critically endangered African wild dog, which needs huge swaths of land to proliferate; the Javan rhino, with only sixty-eight individuals left alive because of the demand for rhino horn in traditional Chinese medicine; and the orange-bellied parrot, with only about fifty individuals left, so that every death pushes the bird closer to extinction (thankfully, the parrots' saltmarsh habitat was unaffected by the recent Australian wildfires). From there, designers picked the animals that most resonated with them. Yarns were chosen from six continents—animal fibers only including merino wool, alpaca, silk, yak, angora, and brush-tail possum—so animals could be "ambassadors for the book," Renner says, and sourced from companies with a commitment to sustainability and with colors in the R:E:D design palette.

The result is a collection that spins an expressionistic narrative about how craft and environmental activism can intersect. For example, Renner's handsome unisex sweater All About the Scales (shown at right) honors the critically endangered Chinese pangolin, a creature that charmingly carries its young on its tail and looks like a cross between an armadillo and artichoke. Hunted for its meat and scales, which are used medicinally by different cultures in spite of the fact that studies show animal keratin has no healing properties, the pangolin is the world's most heavily trafficked wild mammal. (In March, the Sierra Club reported that China has moved to ban wildlife trade due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and Vietnam has also taken steps, which may bode well for the pangolin and human beings.) The pullover uses a modified two-color brioche stitch to evoke the pangolin's "armor" and a fitted, body-conscious silhouette to show that there's no need to use the pangolin's scales for their purported aphrodisiac qualities. A sexy sweater does the job.

Renner's daughter Mea Andresen, a fashion designer for the brand Mos Mosh, shows the close connection between humans and chimpanzees through the double-knit bomber jacket David Greybeard, named after the first chimp who allowed Jane Goodall to observe him (see sidebar below). Emblazoned with intarsia handprints on both sides, the reversible sweater illustrates how similar these primates are to humans, sharing at least 98.7 percent of the same DNA. Andresen's child's cardigan, Thumbs Up, incorporates a hood (with chimp ears) and mitts with a thumb gusset to show the importance of the opposable thumb in grasping objects. Human diseases, habitat destruction, and the pet and bushmeat trade has put these close human relatives at risk.

"Mea actually cried when I briefed the designers on the bond the mothers have with their offspring, which is forever," Cevallos says.

Swiss fashion designer Laura Locher's reversible brioche pullover (see page 27) made the book's cover with a graphic depiction of a close colony of erect crested penguins embellished with colorful eyes that appear to stare at on-lookers. Warming seas, disease, and oil spills threaten these endangered birds.

WHY IT MATTERS

But with animals confronting onslaughts as complicated as agricultural encroachment and oceans filled with microplastics, what can this bestiary of knitting patterns really do for them?

It can get the word out, Renner says. "We can still make a difference, and it's the little differences we all make that can move this. It was a shock to knitters we have come in contact with that the agenda is so urgent, and it's made knitters who have been touched by the book realize that we have to make changes, all of us, in our everyday lives."

Rørmann, who shepherded the book as its project manager and added research about the health benefits of knitting and giving to R:E:D; observed that the book's power lies in its stories. "When I do a sweater of the penguin or the tuna, I tell their stories to my friends," she says. "And it keeps going on and the stories will travel—and that's the higher purpose. When you give someone a jumper from the book to keep them warm, you give some stories and your heart." □

THE STORY OF DAVID GREYBEARD

He was the first chimpanzee to allow Jane Goodall into the world of chimpanzees. He was the first to forget his fear about the white great ape that had joined their patch.

"Chimpanzees, more like us than any other animal, form a living link between two worlds, human and nonhuman beings," writes Jane Goodall. "When David Greybeard reached out to touch my hand, I needed no words to understand his message of reassurance. David Greybeard was gentle and calm, and it was he who helped me to open the door into the magic world of the wild chimpanzees—for his companions observed his lack of fear and thus accepted me far more quickly than they would otherwise have done."

Mea Andresen's magnificent David Greybeard pattern was inspired by the similarity between humans and chimpanzees—how we share almost 99 percent of the same DNA.

Our hands are almost the same. Whose hands are on the jumper? Are they human—or chimpanzee?

An Ingenious Seam

We have Elizabeth Zimmermann to thank for inventing this clever Phoney Seam.

AS A COMMITTED CIRCULAR KNITTER, I rarely meet a seam. (I resisted the temptation to call myself a Dyed-in-the-Wool circular knitter.) However... Many decades ago, when seamless circular sweaters were rather looked down upon (even Mary Thomas referred to them as “peasant” knitting), Elizabeth Zimmermann stubbornly continued to design in this mode. And magazine editors stubbornly continued to convert her circular designs into flat pieces to be sewn together. (Which turned out to be a Good Thing, as it led her to publish her own designs, with proper instructions.) In conversation with flat-knitters, Elizabeth gleaned that the main argument against circular garments was this: “Without seams, a sweater doesn’t hang right.” To this day, that makes no sense to me. Nevertheless that statement rankled, and it gave EZ the idea to stick a pair of side “seams” into her next circular stockinette-stitch Fair Isle yoke sweater. She knew about the purl-stitch seams on circular Guernsey sweaters (see photo A) but wanted something more subtle. During her experiments, she came up with what she called a Phoney Seam: Drop the side stitch from the underarm to the lower edge (or to just above the ribbing).

HOW TO DROP A STITCH IN STOCKINETTE Some of you might have been taught to be afraid of dropped stitches, but once you become familiar with EZ’s Phoney Seam, no more worries. Let the seam stitch fall off the needle. If you are using wool, the stitch will not “run” down the knitting like an old-fashioned nylon stocking; rather, you will have to pull and pluck at it to release each stitch. The result will be a series of horizontal ladders, with the dropped stitch at the bottom. (It always surprises me how much wool it takes to knit a single stitch.) Now, with a crochet hook, go through the dropped stitch, *hook 2 ladders together (B) and pull them through the stitch; then hook the next single ladder through the stitch. Repeat from * to the top. If you end with a double ladder, just put those two strands onto the needle and treat them as a single stitch. That single vertical row now has one-third fewer rounds in it and produces a very slight welt, making a seam that cannot be steamed or blocked out (C). Not only does it give the garment a snappy look, but it is also a natural guide to align the body stitches perfectly straight when blocking. By the way, if you are knitting a plain-body gansey, you needn’t be interrupted twice each round by having to remember the purl seam stitches. Instead, knit mindlessly to the underarm, drop each side stitch to the lower edge, turn the body inside out, and crochet-hook up every ladder to the underarm. Voilà—a purl seam stitch on the outside.

...IN GARTER STITCH Since this is a square fabric (stitch gauge and ridge gauge being practically equal in measurement when knitting firmly with wool), after dropping the “seam” stitch, hook up two ladders together each time (D). This makes a sharp fold at each seam and yields a very handsome vertical stockinette-stitch line along each side of a garter-stitch jacket. On a waist-shaped body, it produces a particularly striking tailored appearance.

...AND IN REVERSIBLE GARTER STITCH When dropping a stitch on a garter-stitch fabric—because it takes two rows to make one ridge—you will note that the ladders are more or less in pairs. If you run a finger (or a crochet hook) between them, these pairs can be separated into front and back ladders (E). Aha! Grab the dropped stitch at the lower edge and hook up every front ladder. Now turn the garment over. Because you have already used the dropped stitch, you must find a strand that can be twisted and called a stitch. Grab this and hook up every back ladder. The result, discovered by Joan Schrouder, is a totally reversible seam on a totally reversible fabric. This seam generates a stockinette stitch on both sides, so it will not fold, but it is decoratively useful on any reversible garter-stitch item, like a blanket, jacket, vest, or shawl. ■

set theory

The term capsule wardrobe popped up in the 1970s, coined by Susie Faux, who owned a London boutique called Wardrobe. The idea was to streamline your closet with a core collection of garments that were unlikely to go out of fashion and could be worn with any number of seasonal accessories. The theory gained in popularity in the '80s when Donna Karan showed her "Seven Easy Pieces." Back then, capsule collections were intended to promote a designer's most "essential" items, but as time goes on, the term has become synonymous with attempts to make our lives more ecological, economical, and sustainable.

MAKE IT YOUR OWN: Tips to Keep in Mind

- Zero in on a color palette
- Know what works best for your body type and complexion
- Opt for classic shapes and patterns
- Choose high-quality yarn, as your collection will be getting a lot of wear

Dora, the Diva

Designer DORA OHRENSTEIN has had an impressive career in music, and is enjoying a second act in the world of crochet.

She's a lifelong New Yorker, but Dora Ohrenstein first learned to crochet in Amsterdam in the 1970s where, as a self-described "hippie," she lived on a houseboat. Not particularly crafty, but always into fashion, Ohrenstein used herself as a fit model, creating and wearing stylish garments and selling them in a high-end boutique.

"I learned from a magazine," she says. "That was way before YouTube."

Only 20 at the time, she returned to New York City and completed her bachelor's degree at Barnard College. Already an accomplished pianist, she took singing lessons and eventually became a professional soprano. She didn't pick up a crochet hook again for almost three decades. "I had a thirty-year career as a professional singer, specializing in new music, baroque music, and art song," she explains. "I sang the world premiere of many pieces, and my performances were reviewed in the New York Times and major newspapers all over the world. I made twenty commercial recordings and toured internationally as vocal soloist of the Philip Glass Ensemble for ten years." She has also taught singing for the past twenty-five years, giving one-on-one voice lessons, privately and at Wagner College on Staten Island.

How did crochet find its way back into her life? "Crochet design is my third career," Ohrenstein says. "First, I was a singer, then a singer and teacher. When I reached my 50s in the early 2000s, I stopped singing professionally." With some extra time and creative bandwidth on her hands, she remembered her earlier fling with crochet. "When I revisited crochet, I really loved it and started making garments for myself without using patterns, guided by how-to-design knitting and crochet books from the 1970s." She had come full circle.

Now, Dora Ohrenstein has two lives, and she is highly regarded in both.

"I find having these two different lives—in music and in crochet design—quite stimulating," she says with a laugh. The author of seven crochet books, she is a recognized authority on Tunisian crochet and has traveled extensively researching the origins of the craft.

Her crochet curiosity has taken her as far afield as Tajikistan. "I went to Central Asia to see if it might be where crochet originated. The women in a very remote region of the Pamirs make colorful slip-stitched jurab [heavy socks] that look like rugs, and I wanted to find out how old that tradition is. I was able to document that it was there as long ago as the late nineteenth century, but without a research grant to continue, that's as far as I got."

Ohrenstein's study has also taken her to Kyrgyzstan, Istanbul, and Kiev, as well as on insider tours of numerous textile museums and collections. "I've had some fascinating visits to back rooms of museums where they have a large collection of historical crochet. The work I've found in these places is so beautiful, and yet even in museum settings, curators often know little about crochet's history—and one even finds items where the actual technique used is misidentified. I want people to understand that crochet only dates back to the nineteenth century and is not ancient."

Ohrenstein credits crochet gurus Jean Leinhauser (founder of Leisure Arts) and Rita Weiss (founder of Dover Publications' needlework division) with helping her break into the business of crochet design. In 2004, she attended the Crochet Guild of America annual conference and met these two powerhouses, who admired her garments and became her mentors. "Jean and I had a special bond—we were both single, professional women with big goals, and lifelong learners," Ohrenstein says. "She was confident that I could learn to write and publish patterns, and that made it so much easier for me to go forward."

Other influences include the intricate nineteenth-century crocheted lace of Mademoiselle Eléonore Riego de la Branchardière, the contemporary work of Brazilian fashion designer Helen Rödel, and the collections of Anna Sui and Missoni. "Crochet has been showing up on the runway year after year for a reason: The fashion world appreciates its beauty and versatility."

And life in New York City provides ample design inspiration. "Walking the streets of my neighborhood," Ohrenstein says, "I'll see fabulous fashions in a shop window or on a chic passerby, and that will give me an idea."

As for the divide between knitting and crochet, Ohrenstein doesn't buy it. "The idea that knitting is more appropriate for garments has been thoroughly debunked. Unattractive crochet garments are the result of using yarn that is too heavy or working at a gauge that is too dense." In the 1960s, she says, "when worsted-weight acrylic yarn became the norm in the U.S., crochet garments started to look bulky and stiff. Wrong yarn choice!" Her preferred yarn weight to create the flattering, drapery fabrics she is known for is fingering. And, of course, luxury fibers don't hurt. Her favorites? Alpaca, pima cotton, and cashmere.

She has had a blog and an online newsletter (Crochet Insider), traveled, researched, and written articles for all the major yarn publications, but what Dora Ohrenstein is best known for and loves most is fashion crochet. "I create garments that have excellent drape, fit beautifully, and feature interesting stitches, that others can make, too," she says.

"From conversations I saw on Ravelry," Ohrenstein adds, "I understood how intimidated crocheters were by garment making. So when I had the chance to do my first sweater book, Custom Crocheted Sweaters [Lark, 2012], I included a great deal of material on construction, sizing, and fit. I know that book and Top-Down Crochet [Storey, 2016] empowered many people to take the leap into garment making. That feels really good." ■

I'LL HAVE WHAT SHE'S HAVING For aspiring designers and knitters interested in delving into crochet, Dora Ohrenstein's seventh and latest book, Crochet Every Way Stitch Dictionary (Abrams, 2019), takes a new slant on the craft. She explains: "It's the first and only book that provides two ways of shaping each stitch pattern. For anyone who wants to design, it saves innumerable hours of work, since it plots out exactly how each stitch can be shaped either at the edge or internally (as in raglan shaping). For crocheters who want to explore more than a simple rectangle, this book gives them the tools."

"The classic striped French Breton sweater is the inspiration for this design. For a more updated and modern look, I've added a broader stripe of contrast color, flattering side slits, a semifitted silhouette, and a longer, shirt-back detail. The warm pink heather stripes add an extra contemporary look from the traditional navy and cream."

A summery take on the classic marinière never loses its appeal.

The marinière (also known as a Breton shirt, as many French sailors were from Brittany, or simply tricot rayé, which means "striped sweater") traditionally has blue and white horizontal stripes. The shirt became part of the official uniform for French seamen in 1858, and a genuine marinière has twenty blue stripes on the body and fourteen on the sleeves (twenty-one and fifteen, respectively, for a very tall sailor). There's also a Russian version worn as part of the military uniform, a sleeveless striped undershirt called the telnyashka. Long a distinctively French garment, however, the marinière entered the world of high fashion with Yves Saint Laurent, who was inspired by the striped shirt Jean Seberg wore in the 1960 film Breathless. Since then, the iconic stripes have been donned by creative types the world over, from Pablo Picasso and Andy Warhol to Audrey Hepburn and Brigitte Bardot.

THE MAKERS

Wind-Blown

Under her design moniker Kazekobo, YOKO HATTA has for years been a breath of fresh air in the knitting community, creating reliably gorgeous patterns that appeal to American audiences while maintaining a clean, effortless Japanese sensibility.

How and when did you learn to knit?

I learned to crochet first, when I was 5 or 6 years old. My mother taught me the basics, like how to hold the hook and how to make a chain stitch. I made some crochet ribbons and later on a muffler. In high school, I wanted to make myself a vest, and that's when I decided to teach myself to knit. My mother was an editor for handicraft books, and our house was full of leftover yarn and craft textbooks with helpful tutorials. After some practice, I ended up knitting two vests. I chose a purl-stitch pattern, and the vests weren't exactly beautiful in the end, but I liked them.

Tell us about your design name, Kazekobo.

In Chinese characters, Kazekobo means "wind studio," with kaze meaning "wind." The word can also refer to a person who is a bit of a wanderer. When I was getting my design career started, I wanted to be the wind in the field of handknitting.

How would you compare American and Japanese knitting aesthetics?

I think the biggest difference between the Japanese knitter and the American knitter is color choice. Compared to American knitters, most Japanese knitters prefer much quieter color palettes. Japanese knitters also prefer to make their projects using the same yarn and color of the samples.

Your designs are minimal without being plain, and the overall effect always seems so effortless. Does designing feel effortless to you?

Designing takes time and patience. I knit so many swatches while I'm designing, because it's only by knitting with the yarn that I'm planning on using that I can get an idea of what is good for it. When I finish the swatch, I measure the gauge and figure out how a stitch fits into the pattern. When I'm done with that, I can start to see the finished shape.

When was your first pattern book published in Japan?

In 1984, I published a book of summer garments for both men and women. It was cool at the time and was received quite well. But I wasn't actually in Japan when it was released. I had just left for Peru to teach my designs to native Peruvians right before the book came out.

What are your biggest design influences? What inspires you?

My biggest influence is travel, and getting to see different places, people, and cultures. It's getting to see something different from my everyday life.

Do you have a particular favorite among your patterns or books?

My favorite pattern or book will always be my latest one. I love all my patterns, books, and the editors who I worked with to get them published.

You've got twenty-two pages of patterns on Ravelry, appearing in 235 books and magazines. How do you manage to stay so prolific?

When I design, I keep my focus on what I am doing at that moment. I do not think about the volume of design work I have at any given time. It's really the way I make my schedule that keeps my deadlines under control. I have a habit of getting behind (actually most of the time!), so I set the schedule two weeks ahead, and I usually end up being just about on time.

Do you have mentors in terms of designers?

In terms of knitwear designers, no. But I have always looked up to Japanese designer Rei Kawakubo of Comme des Garçons. I really respect her spirit.

What's the best knitting advice you've ever gotten?

It may not be exactly knitting advice, but I always remember these words: Live the life you love, love the life you live. ■

JACK DEUTSCH; NATASHA SENKO THALMAN (STYLING); CINDY ADAMS (HAIR AND MAKEUP)

KNITTING IN JAPAN

I AM NOT ON ANY SOCIAL MEDIA, but in my experiences of meeting with knitters in person, I feel that everybody is enjoying knitting in their own way, from beginners through to experienced knitters. They aren't competing with each other or anything. They're just sharing information and happily knitting.

Rows 3–6 Rep rows 1 and 2.

STITCH GLOSSARY

BL(dc or tr) When working dc or tr, work under the back loop only of the previous row or round.

DSdc Double Shell with double crochet: (5 dc in next st) twice

DStr Double Shell with treble crochet: (5 tr in next st) twice.

Foundation single crochet (Fsc) Insert hook in designated st and draw up loop, ch 1, yo, draw through 2 loops on hook. For next Fsc insert hook in base ch of st just made.

Puff (Yo, insert hook in designated st and draw up loop) 3 times, yo, draw through all loops on hook. Note that Puffs are always worked into the 10 stitches of a DS.

Special single crochet (Ssc) Insert hook from front to back under 2 top loops in previous st and from back to front under 2 top loops in working st, yo and draw up loop, yo, draw through 2 loops. When working in the rnd begin the rnd by working into the 2nd st, end the rnd by working into the first st. When working flat, on first st of row bring the hook from back to front in first st, yo and draw up loop, yo, draw through 2 loops. Always work Ssc loosely to avoid pinching fabric.

NOTES

1 This pattern requires careful line by line reading for accuracy since shaping occurs on almost every round. Note that in the open ripple stitches different heights are used, sometimes dc and sometimes tr. The dc ripples are used to make shaping more gradual.

2 In solid sections of the garment, ripples are alternated with rounds of plain treble stitches that add visual texture.

3 Dress is worked in one piece in the round to the armhole, then divided for front and back, which are worked separately in rows. After completing armhole, the front and back are connected using foundation sc stitches. Then the body is worked in one piece to the hem.

brk Knit the stitch that was slipped in the previous row together with its yarnover.

brk4st dec Sl 2 sts knitwise one at a time, place next st on cn and hold to front, k the next st, pass 2nd sl st over, place st on LH needle and pass foll st over, move st to RH needle and pass first sl st over, place st on cn onto LH needle then move st on RH needle to LH needle and pass over st from cn, move st to RN needle—4 sts dec'd.

brp Purl the stitch that was slipped in the previous row together with its yarnover.

TWO-COLOR ITALIAN CAST-ON

Setup Make a slip knot using both colors and place on the needle. Separate the colors with your finger and thumb with color A around your thumb and the color B around your index finger.

1. Bring the needle over the B and then under both strands of yarn. The two strands are over the needle with the A to the left of the B.

2. With needle, draw A under B so that A strand is over the needle from front to back and B strand (around the index finger) is in front of the A strand.

3. Move the needle under the A strand, and then up between the two strands and over the B. Draw B under A—2 sts have been cast on.

Rep steps 1–3 until the desired number of sts minus 1 have been cast on. End with 1 backwards loop in A. Untie slip knot after knitting the first row.

ITALIAN BIND-OFF

Setup Cut A to 4 times length of edge to bind-off and thread onto a tapestry needle.

1) Insert tapestry needle purlwise into first (selvage) st. Pull yarn through, leaving st on knitting needle.

2) Going behind first st, insert tapestry needle knitwise into first purl column st. Pull yarn through, leaving st on knitting needle.

3) Insert tapestry needle into front of first st and then purlwise into next knit column st (catching the yarn over with the knit st). Pull yarn through, dropping first knit st from knitting needle.

4) Insert tapestry needle purlwise into first purl column st and knitwise into following purl column st. Pull yarn through, dropping first purl column st from knitting needle.

Rep steps 3 and 4 until three sts remain.

5) Insert tapestry needle into front of first st and purlwise into last knit column st. Pull yarn through, dropping first knit column st from knitting needle.

6) Insert tapestry needle purlwise into last 2 sts. Pull yarn through, dropping both sts from needle.
